Americans are careful about how and when they meet one another's eyes. In their normal conversation, each eye contact lasts only about a second before one or both individuals look away. When two Americans look into each other's eyes, emotions are heightened and the relationship becomes more intimate. However, they carefully avoid this, except in appropriate circumstances.

Proper street behavior in the United States. There is a nice balance of attention and privacy; You are supposed to look at a passer-by just enough to show that you are aware of his presence. If you look too long, you appear arrogant or secretive; too much and you are rude. Usually what happens is that people eye each other. They are about eight feet apart, at which point both cast down their eyes. In England the polite listener stares at the speaker. He blinks his eyes occasionally as a sign of interest. That is what he says. To Americans, they expect the listener to nod or to murmur something such as "mm-hum".
